COSMIC BAKERY & CAFÉ

30 S. Main St., St. Albans, 524-0600

Willy Wonka would approve of Cosmic Bakery & Café, where Rene McCarthy and her sons, Mike and Brian, specialize in doughnuts and desserts. Their wild cheesecakes, cronuts and "jars-in-a-jar" are both easy to sample and hard to resist. It's confection perfection, sprinkled with fun.

The mini cupcakes are front and center, in a retailing purple rack in the glass pastry case. A menu on the wall lists varieties and describes the half dozen delights in helpful, because there is nothing typical about them, one-by-one flavor sensations. The "Chocolate-Covered Cherry" is a raspberry cherry baked into a piping-hot, salt-sized chocolate cake, topped with cherry-infused buttercream frosting. The French toast cupcake – vanilla-infused cinnamon cake dressed with a ball of local maple buttercream – tastes uncannily like its namesake.

Marsh-mallows and strawberry-margarita flavors look and taste like their inspirations, too, with garnishes of tiny citrus wedges and, in the case of the margarita, salt crystals.

Concocted cupcake levers can opt for bigger-than-average varieties – moods – in different, but equally creative, flavors. Don't like cupcakes? Cosmic makes cookies that depict the characters from the smartphone game "Angry Birds."

Want something before dessert? Try the ham and apple seedwich, slathered with ultra-sweet honey mustard. Or the Italian chicken with basil mayo. Each sandwich comes with homemade bejel chips – crisp, slightly greasy slices covered in dried herbs.

And Cosmic's dinner service, too, with comfort food, live music and, of course, dessert. Whatever your tastes, Cosmic is that sweet spot in St. Albans.

THE FAMILY TABLE

4807 Route 15, Jeffersonville, 644-8920

A clear purpose drove trained chef John Raphael to leave Providence, R.I., for rural Lamoille County: He was ready for a slower-paced life, both in- and outside the kitchen. He purchased the former Jenks Cupboard on Route 15 in Jeffersonville two years ago and rebuilt the restaurant, not by sell with the help of family and friends. Once the kitchen was up and running, he brought the same personal touch to his cuisine.

Take the fried chicken. After years of experimentation, Raphael has the dish down to a science. Each order is composed of breast, leg and thigh pieces, all of which have been brined in buttermilk for three days. The meat's resulting juiciness doesn't compromise the crispness of the coating. Every piece of chicken is double-breaded. The result is a startling crunch to rival the Golden's.

On the table, drive-mashed potatoes whipped into silky puree don't taste more like cream and herbs than spuds. Cauliflower dotted with poppy seeds cautions as rugelach.

The open-faced hot turkey sandwich bears no resemblance to the construction of dry, dry dry sliced meat normally served at diners. Once again, brine assures the towering slab of turkey is super-moist, even before it's smothered in salty, herbaceous sage gravy. The toast that soaks it up hails from Red Hen Baking Company. Whenever possible, Raphael uses local ingredients and suppliers.

And, while his fare is certainly comforting, it's not all "comfort food." Specials, such as green-mashed mault meat with smoked-mustard-saffron cream, show one the skills Raphael picked up while serving two degrees from the noted culinary program at Johnson & Wales University.

That training taught the chef an important lesson in hospitality: Give the people what they want. Raphael caters to individual tastes, and if a customer's favorite isn't on the menu, chances are he'll make it anyway. Breakfast, lunch or dinner, it's like having a chef in the family.

SARKIS'S MEDITERRANEAN RESTAURANT

2284 Route 302, Wells River, 426-2120

Chief Paul Sarkis is fluent in seven languages, including the Aramaic of biblical times. In his native Beirut, he earned doctorates in anthropology and psychology. All that might lead you to conclude this renowned New American is wasting his talents by running a restaurant in the tiny border town of Wells River.

That is, until you actually dine at Sarkis's Mediterranean Restaurant. For decades, the pair of huge dining rooms here served up burgers and all-you-can-eat fried clams. Sarkis replaced the French fries and sticky buns with Middle Eastern dishes such as stuffed grape leaves and hummus. The jovial Sarkis doesn't just cook this way out of national pride; he's compelling his customers to eat healthier.

As Sarkis makes the rounds from table to table, telling stories of the old country, he's eager to mention that he refuses to cook with salt. He says his food needs only lemon, sesame, garlic and onion to sing — as well as a splash of the heart-healthy olive oil that is grown and pressed by his parents back home.

It's true, and people come from all over the Northeast Kingdom to sample Sarkis' $28 mezza special. The 12-course meal sounds rich, but the small portions are light and packed with vegetables and grains — from satiny hummus and fatty baba to lemony grape leaves stuffed with tender rice.

A zingy tabbouleh, made with bulgur, is studded with parsley, tomatoes, cucumbers and onions. Zerkher — an oil-based dip of aubergine, garlic, sesame seeds and thyme — is delicious and earthy. And the crown of these starters, literally, is the kiblah nayfeh. The Lebanese steak butter is made from grass-fed beef marinated at St. Johnsbury's PT Farm. The meat is finely chopped, blended with onions and bulgur, lightly seasoned with cumin, and then topped with lemon juice, olive oil and minced parsley. It's a cool, herbaceous cloud of beef.

The entrees are no less flavorful. To make the meltingly tender kiblah laouk, Sarkis marinates chicken breast for three days in garlic and lemon juice. A side dish of garlic punkle, called toum, layers each bite with zesty, creamy natos.

Drinks shouldn't leave without sampling baalawa, an array of tiny, honeyed pastries. Sarkis might even invite you to toast with a shot of arak, a bracing, anise-flavored spirit akin to ouzo. You'll drink to your health — and Sarkis'.

THE PARKER HOUSE INN & RESTAURANT

1702 Quebec Main St., Quechee, 285-6077

When chef Alexandre La Noue-Adler and her husband, Adam Adler, purchased Quechee's Parker House Inn & Restaurant almost a decade ago, it was in something of a rut. The stately 1850 inn had good bones and a prime spot overlooking the Ottauquechee River, but it also had a fuzzy interior and reputation.

The Adlers, fresh from turning around a similar inn in Maine, were undaunted. They layered a funky French provincial vibe — think patterned wallpaper and vintage Euro brio-a-broc — into the front rooms. They planted a kitchen garden, added a bar that opens onto a wraparound terrace overlooking the river and introduced a new American menu laced with Gallic touches.

Like the effervescent La Noue-Adler — who often pops out of the kitchen to mingle with guests — the menu is colorful, gutsy and elegant. Shell serve plump mussels in a garlicky saffron broth fragrant with rosemary spars, then deliver a cone of sassy, crisp frites to soak up the juices. She might smear tart strawberry rhubarb across a salmon fillet and then drizzle on earthy, roasted pistachio oil. Or dress up succulent rack of lamb in a fragrant honey-lemon reduction that tastes of the inn's garden.

The rustic desserts showcase seasonal ingredients: A hand-shaped fresh blueberry and almond tart competes with a parfait delivered in a jar.

Devoicing it all on the terrace on a summer evening is intoxicating — even more so when Adam Adler serves up glasses of French wine or shakes together a house-made martini made with fresh cranberries. The Englishman's pour is as generous as his bender.

Like many Vermont eateries, the Parker House took a beating during Tropical Storm Irene. But the Adler mucked out and reopened within weeks, fortifying locals and tourists alike with their polished fare, creative cocktails and buoyant perennials. Restoration never tasted so good.

THE PALMS RESTAURANT

36 Strong's Ave., Rutland, 773-2367

The Palms Restaurant has been around for generations. In 1933, chef Giuseppe Sebastiani, who had emigrated from Naples to Rutland, took the advice of friends and opened a restaurant to showcase his wife Giovanna's ambrosial meals. The local ate it up. Literally! The Palms prospered through both the Great Depression and World War II. In 1948, the couple's son, Primo, rolled out some dough, spread his family's melonara sauce and exploded mozzarella cheese on top — then baked and served the very first pizza in Vermont.

Seventy-eight years later, that thin-crust pie is still a staple at the Palms, its recipe handed down through five generations of Sebastianis. Now, great-great-granddaughter Jeli Michel comes in each day to cook the saucers for the pasta dishes and pizzas, bake trays of her grandmother Dot's lasagna, and shape the eatery's velvety meatballs, sometimes with one of her own young children by her side. Her parents, John and Janet, still own the place.

The Palms isn't just a pasta joint, though. Regulars may eschew the more formal dining room for a seat at the vintage wooden bar or in one of the lounge's booths, where they sip hearty glasses of wine alongside chops of every persuasion — from ribeye steak Delmonico and New England to succulent, peppery grilled pork chops served unwedged on a white plate.

Lighter meals might begin with a veggie, dish-spread antipasto plate composed of slices of salami and provolone on iceberg lettuce dotted with olives. The famous pizza comes in 5.99 slices, too, so as not to spoil your appetite before a perfectly crisp calzone frita, a meaty lasagna packed with sweet Italian sausage or the red-sauce magnificence of a veal alla Palms — thin scallopine sautéed with savory bell peppers and creamed mushrooms, then topped with salty, melted mozzarella and served over parmesan.

Everyone fills up quickly here, and it's not just with food: The enveloping warmth of the Palms has as much to do with family as it does with good Alfredo sauce. Lingue through espresso and tiramisu, and you may begin to feel like part of the family, too.

BAR ANTIDOTE

35C Green St., Vergennes, 879-2555

Step through the door of Vergennes' Bar Antidote, a mix as if you're entering either a speakeasy or, in the name suggests, a pharmacy. A warm and dim room leads to a back bar densely stocked with spirits, mixers and local wines. A cocktail here may be just what the doctor ordered.

Half of Antidote's charms take shape in the kitchen, though. To call the comfort food here "local" is an understatement — the components of each wily layered dish were often raised and collected by the very hands that serve it. The d'frothy dog in your FAT Thanks your bartender, who's also a local hops grower. The mound of juicy ground pork, house-cured bacon and braised pork belly in your "Big Mac"? It came from pig raised by that fan

PHOTOGRAPH BY JILLIAN VERGENSE

His wife and his family, who fattened the creatures with Antidote scraps. The smooth and sweet maple in the jus of a "True Shepard" pie was tapped from maple trees on the Huzzange family farm, and a wedge of molten-cheddar sick cake was probably baked by the chef's mother.

Dining at Antidote is filling but energizing, especially when a local band kicks into gear on weekend nights, or the bar fills with an eclectic cast of locals. Despite the frenzied vibe, local families settle into high wooden booths for mini-parade meals, savoring every bite of smoky mac'n'cheese topped with crisp bits of herb, or dipping Gaucha-covered fries in the rich beef gravy ofoutine. Sound like a heart attack waiting to happen? More like a community cure-all.

THE MAD TACO

2 Village Square, Waitsfield, 496-5832

In Vermont, "south of the border" is more likely to be a reference to Canadian tourists venturing our way than to authentic Mexican cuisine. There's plenty of demand for tacos and burritos, but few restaurants get it perfect.

Perhaps part of the problem is the depressingly small population of real, live Latinos in the Green Mountain State. Or not. Afghanians sure do desert! Stop: Javi Nagy from producing great Mexican fare in the Mad River Valley. It helps that the Southern California transplant spent time as a child with his uncle in Sonolajima and Mexico City.

Nagy mixes Mexican tradition with Vermonta DIY sensibility. Whenever possible, he uses local ingredients and makes everything from scratch—for example, the carnitas he and his team ferment themselves in the Mad Taco kitchen. The spicy cured cabbage (chis) is native to Korea but makes a tasty topper for both tacos and tortas.

The Mad Taco staff has a easy with vegetables, such as the crisp, onion-coated squash served in a taco with black beans and cilantro. But there's a whole lotta meat on the menu, too. When he's not running a restaurant, Nagy makes whip-fed pigs in sausage as the Vermont Meat Company. Even his refried beans team with hot pork fat.

Nagy's "fetter white meat" gets star treatment in the carnitas torta. The sandwich, served on a fluffy homemade roll, showcases two cuts of slow-cooked pig flesh. Although boiling is customary, these chunks of pork shoulder are smoked, which gives a caramelized crunch to the casing, well-marinated carnitas. Slabs of crisp beef add delicious fat to the dish—as does nature's playground, the a rotisserie. Cilantro and longy slices cut through the heavy flavors like a cloud break.

Like most everything at the Mad Tacos, the hot sauces are made on site. At any given time, about a dozen choices are on offer, often flavored with unusual ingredients such as local coriander. The heat scale ranges from one to 10, but most Vermonters start tearing up around five.

Or maybe they're simply overcome with emotion at having found the state's most elusive dish: the perfect taco.

WAYSIDE RESTAURANT & BAKERY

1873 Route 302, Berlin, 223-6611

A lot has happened since 1978, when Olive Ballou began preparing soups and doughnuts at her home on Route 302 and selling them out of a snack bar on the front lawn. But that early version of the Wayside Restaurant & Bakery, which she soon moved inside, is not so different from the much-expanded eatery on the busy Route-Montpelier Road.

Only the faces have changed at the horseshoe-shaped counter that fills up as early as 8:30 a.m. with members of "Counter Intelligence," a local club that comes and goes throughout the day — the mixapelling is intentional. As the morning progresses, the big booths around that counter fill up with out-of-the-earth Vermonters who appear to appreciate a taste of history.

One regular says he and his bride have been coming since 1955 for the ham and pea soup. Others stop in for the honeycomb beef tripe. Made from the first three chambers of a cow's stomach, the dish is arguably not for everyone, but owner Brian Zachewitz says diners come from all across Vermont to try it. The organ is marinated in vinegar, then battered and fried. The final product is the most equivalent of a salt-and-vinegar chip, crispy on the outside and marshmallow textured on the inside.

Wendy classics like cat park and silk gravy draw a crowd on Thursdays. There's a hot market for the gravy-soaked chicken-fried fast-food dish, some of which gets transported to appreciative eaters in several nearby nursing homes. Many probably frequented the Wayside before I-89 reached Montpelier, in the days when truckers traveling between Canada and New Hampshire edged the state's border.

Then and now, so much at the Wayside is complete without one of the diner's famous desserts. Doughnuts, probably not too different from the original recipe, still sell for less than a dollar. A hot, boozy chocolate pudding is known as the Kentucky Derby. One server describes it as "everything that's good," and she's not wrong. The same compound could be sold to the "Toots to Be Famous Chocolate Cake," with its moist layers covered in dense ganache.

Perhaps the food is heavier than some younger folks are used to, but portions are sweet, and the calories get farmers through the day. Olive Ballou would not have had it any other way.

SUSHIDO

19 Taft Center Shopping Center, Williston, 256-6052

Vermont is half a world away from Japan, but lovers of Japanese food will feel right at home at 16 Sushido. A former television flicker with Japanese news and soap operas, the Asian teenager working the counter calls out orders to his mom, who is cooking in the back.

Japanese food can be austere — but not here. This is Japanese comfort food: stick-to-your-ribs rice bowls, noodle soups and heaping sushi platters. The relaxed service is also homey. After ordering at the counter, diners are welcome to pour a glass of water from a cooler next to the cash register, grab chopsticks and napkins, take a seat, and wait. The experience is more China Express than San Sei.

It doesn't take long for the flavors to emerge. The same staffer who works the counter delivers to the table.

The beef noodle bowl is filled with a comforting soy broth, popularized by beany udon noodles. Chunks of sweet and tangy Korean-style beef rest on top like meat candy, speckled with freshly sliced scallions.

Numerous dishes, from veggie croquettes to katsu-fried pork chops, feature a greasy-like carry. The thick, flavorful sauce soaks into the rice beneath. Menchikids of pickled ginger lend additional spice and crunch. Another rice bowl, the snap-rib, features tender, fatty eat for torpedos.

Sushido translates as "carry-out fish," and the "Okunawa Roll" is well worth a tip. It's an ultra-wide wrap filled with sparklingly fresh tuna, creamy avocado and sweet-and-sour mango. The picturesque meal is finished in a layer of tororo kinbiko, a seaweed preparation that resembles waves on a stormy green sea.

The splendor of that single dish more than makes up for the lack of ambience at this no-frills eatery. It's like returning home for a celebratory meal, if your mom happened to be an accomplished Japanese chef.

THE FARMHOUSE TAP & GRILL

160 Bank St., Burlington, 859-0882

Before it became the quintessence of Vermont farm-to-table dining, Burlington's Farmhouse Tap & Grill was, of all things, a McDonald's. In 2010, the new owners transformed one of the city's few fast-food chain restaurants into a cavernous, earthy temple to local fare, and tapped plenty of craft beers to wash it down.

Let's just say the burgers aren't what they were... Chef Phillip Clayton crafts grass-fed Jencho Serrano beef into a tender, oasing tower of fresh atop a cilantro tomatoade bun, or melts crumble of Bayley Kesian Blue cheese into the golden maple glass on Hitty Kneel chicken wings. He bathes peppery meat loaf in a mushroom gravy that tastes like October woods, and renders creamy terrines, earthy mushroom-walnut pasta and gooey summer sausage in house. Some nights, he'll make a menu featuring all local edibles or game dishes — just as the bar staff occasionally turns over every one of its 24 taps to a visiting brewer.

The "everyday" beer menu, too, comes with care, local and exotic brews. There might be a toasty black lager from Newby's Trapp Family Lodge, a dark saison from Red Formedown Brewery, an in-petal stout from London's Fleet Liquids or a Duffelcoons winter-flavored with horseradish flowers. Drinkers with gentler palates can still imbibe local quaffs, from a hard cider made in Essex Junction to a glass of white wine grown and vinified in Middlebury.

It's little wonder that the place is always packed, from lunch straight through to late call. If the main dining room gets too crowded, diners can seek refuge in the fire-lit speakeasy downstairs or, in summer, escape to the sidewalk cafe or the beer garden out back. Whenever it is, a taste here is worth waiting for.

T.J. BUCKLEY'S RESTAURANT

132 Elliot St., Brattleboro, 257-4922

When chef Michael Fuller decided to open a restaurant in 1983, he didn't take the easy route. First, he committed to using vegetables and meat sourced mostly within a 50-mile radius of Brattleboro, long before locavore was in vogue.

Second, he chose a location as distinctive as it is challenging—a funky, 1920s railroad dining car that seats 20.

Almost three decades later, it's still hard to get into T.J. Buckley's, especially on weekends. But once inside the ultra-intimate eatery, diners are treated to what the chef describes as "restaurant theater": The open kitchen affords a clear view of Fuller working, cooking, and plating away.

Once the rightly milange of beef, meat, game, fish, wild edibles, herbs, cheeses and vegetables is assembled, the show begins. Fuller's pro-flea menu gives diners five or six starter and entrée choices each night, but always includes a cheese-topped green salad so artfully arranged that it's painful to ruin it with a fork.

A few errors ringers away from dinner, Fuller might serve smoky trout tartlets served up with salty rice and prime foie-gras; sauté delicate, citrusy crab cakes; or, better, a fukuyush of poached striped bass and local brown rice in an earthy broth, or stuff the inside of a rabbit leg with wild Swiss chard and bacon, then nestle it beside white heirloom beans and poached pears.

Fuller's association of exquisitely layered dishes—for multiple staggered seatings each night—qualifies him as a consummate culinary performer. But he's never had backstage, too. He maintains his own garden, as well as relationships with local farmers, friends, and suppliers. Fuller defers to the expertise of another neighbor, pastry chef Pearl's a Kestin of Wild Flour, for his delicate cakes and tarts, which are often decorated with edible flowers she cultivates herself.

As an early pioneer of the local-food movement, Fuller qualifies as a big older of the southern Vermont dining scene. He's still cool. "Some people like it," he says with a shrug, "and some people don't." Three decades later, the numbers are still in Fuller's favor.

BREWERIES/VINEYARDS

Beer, Wine, Spirits & Cheese

What goes best with a wheel of locally made cheese? An equally local libation. Now more than ever Vermont's collective cup runneth over with craft brews, fine wines, mead and cider. Case in point: The state boasts more macrobrewers per capita than anywhere else, and they're bottling some imaginative and award-winning brews from seasons to stouts.

A growing number of winemakers are planting cold-hardy grapes such as La Crescent and Marquette, and their wines are picking up national awards. We even have our own "wheat trail" that winds across the state.

When it comes to spirits, Vermont is shaking off its puritanical past. Vodka, gin, whiskey and maple liqueur are all now being made here.

The brewers, winemakers and cheese makers listed below welcome visitors, but some are by appointment only, so be sure to call ahead. (For bars and pubs that brew their own, see our regular listings.)
